CANADIAN LARGE CENTS 1858-1920

Doug Nyholm

In last months Editors Message I wrote about the Fun of Collecting. I mentioned that I recently purchased an old Whitman bookshelf album partially filled with Canadian Large cents from 1858-1920. I began to fill the holes for the most part with coins purchased from a dealer at our last show and a few I located on eBay. The majority of these Canadian Large cents can be obtained in decent condition for only a few dollars each. As always with virtually any set of coins, U.S. or foreign, there is always at least one or two coins that cost a bit more or are downright rare and expensive. Canadian Large cents is no exception but there is nothing rare, just a couple that did run me over $100 each.

I like to research and learn about coins, especially those that I collect. I thought I would share what I have learned about these Canadian large cent. U.S. Large Cents began in 1793 and continued every year except 1815 until 1857. Canada's government and formation from the Province of Canada to the Dominion of Canada was about a century behind the formation of the United States. Assembling a collection of Canadian Large Cents is infinitely easier than that of U.S. Large Cents. It is also interesting that Canada began issuing their large cents one year after the discontinuance of the U.S. version. Prior to the confederation of Canada in 1867 coins in Canada were in short supply and similar to the early United States there was a conglomeration of foreign and privately issued coins and tokens. The first large cents were issued in 1858 and 1859 and can technically be considered British Colonial coins issued for the Province of Canada. Most collectors today group these early issues with the general set of Canadian large cents as do virtually all folders and albums made to house them.

These initial large cents of 1858/59 were struck to a standard of 100 to a pound rather than the British standard of 80 per pound making them lighter and less popular with the public. The reported mintage of the 1858 issue is 421,000 examples has made this date not only one of the scarest dates of the series but also very popular with collectors. The 1858 order was placed late in the year as part of a much larger order which would include 9,579,000 cents dated 1859. This combined order and official mintage of 1858 and 1859 coins totaled exactly 10,000,000 coins. Many varieties of coins dated 1859 occurred including a 1859 overdate of 1858, re-engraved 9's, and wide 9's and narrow 9's. Most varieties are not extremely valuable but most albums do include the overdate and one example of a re-engraved 9. There is also a experimental 1859 coin struck in brass of which only five examples are known and they are valued up to $35,000. These first coins were struck at the Royal Mint in London and were sufficient for Canada's needs until a second order was placed in 1876. Years later Canada still had over 2 million of the 1858 and 1859 coins in supply and actually sold them to a bank in Newfoundland for a 20% discount.

The design type for the 1858 and 1859 coins vary from later Queen Victoria issues. The portrait of Queen Victoria on these first issues is referred to as the "Young Head" depicted with laurel wreath adorning her head. Those later issues from 1876 to 1901 are referred to as the "Mature Head" which has the Queen wearing a diadem or crown created for the coronation of King George IV in 1820. There are also four minor changes in the Queens portrait which changed through the final years of her reign and are depicted on the large cents until 1902. While Canada's second order was placed in 1876 the Royal Mint in London was operating at full capacity and also was experiencing multiple equipment failures which required the private mint operated by Ralph Heaton in Birmingham to strike the coins for subsequent orders. The Heaton mint would strike the next three issues of Canadian Large Cents in 1876, 1881 and 1882. Heaton would also strike issues dated 1890, 1898, 1900 and 1907. The Heaton mintmark, "H" appears on all of their issues but its position is in two locations depending upon the year. On all issues except for 1899 and 1900 the H appears below the date. On the 1899 and 1900 it appears above the rim at the bottom of the coin between two maple leaves. Beginning in 1908 with the opening of the Canadian mint in Ottawa all issues were struck in Canada with no mintmark. The years 1900 and 1907 were the only years that coins were struck in two locations, London and at the Heaton mint.

Other than the scarce 1858 and 1859/8 over-date the other scarce variety came in 1891. !891 saw the size of the maple leaves change from large to small and also in 1891 the date comes in two sizes, the common large date and the scarce small date. The small date also comes with both sizes of leaves but the prime determining factor for value is the size of the date.

Another interesting variety or type was created in 1911 which has become known at the "Godless" cent. The dies were rushed into production and upon release it was immediately noticed by the public that the inscription read "GEORGIVS V REX ET IND IMP" missing "DEI GRATIA" or "By the Grace of God." It would be corrected the following year due to the public outcry. #

Counterfeit Barber Dimes

Doug Nyholm

We must always be on the lookout for counterfeit coins. I believe that most medium or large amateur collections that do not have everything certified has a good likelihood that it contains at least one counterfeit coin. Whether it is an altered date or mint mark, or even a struck or cast counterfeit it can happen to any of us collectors.

Most collectors give an extra look or examination when purchasing a raw coin, especially if it is a scarce or rare coin such as a 1916-D Mercury Dime, a 1909-SVDB Lincoln or even a 1893-S Morgan dollar. Obviously there are many more targets for counterfeiters, even modern bullion, but what about relatively common coins?

Recently, both Coin World and the Numismatist had articles regarding relatively common Barber dimes which turned out to be counterfeit The Coin World article examined a 1900 Philadelphia Barber dime which has a mintage of over 17 million struck. Even a nice AU coin can be purchased for less than $70 and a Unc. example will only set you back about $100. This coin was submitted to ANACS who identified it as a fake. They stated that it was better than most Chinese counterfeits they have seen but still relatively easy to identify.

The second example identified in an article in the Numismatist was another relatively common 1898 Philadelphia Barber dime. This coin also has a relatively high mintage of over 16 million coins. The value of both the 1900 and 1989 counterfeits is similar and generally not coins that would trigger ones suspicions. This 1898 dime was identified by NGC who noted that the weight was within tolerances. With both of these dimes the date was one of the key identifiers of their being fake. NGC went on to state that even thought the weight was correct the 1898 diem contained no silver.

Both of these dimes were easily identified by the experts but could possibly fool even some seasoned collectors who would possibly not give them any more than a brief inspection.

If purchasing a raw coin of a common date many collectors may only give it a simple and quick examination and just add it to their collection.

Why then are counterfeiters targeting these common date coins that can be purchased for under $100? First, they can be manufactured in quantity, the dies for the struck examples can be used multiple times, especially the reverse and if they are able to create a master obverse die without a date it could be used for the creation of multiple different dated coins. Finally, these counterfeits are likely to be only casually examined and pass much more easily than a rare coin such as a 1916-D Mercury.

The reason for reporting this is to encourage every collector to look at everything you purchase with a more than casual examination. Counterfeiting techniques are improving every year and there is always someone whose goal is to separate you from your money.

On a genuine 1900 Barber dime, the digits in the date are evenly spaced.

Compare LIBERTY on the headband of the genuine dime against the same area on the counterfeit.

The counterfeiters ran out of room to fully accommodate the Y in LIBERTY on the headband.

The 9 in the date of this counterfeit 1900 Barber dime leans to the right.

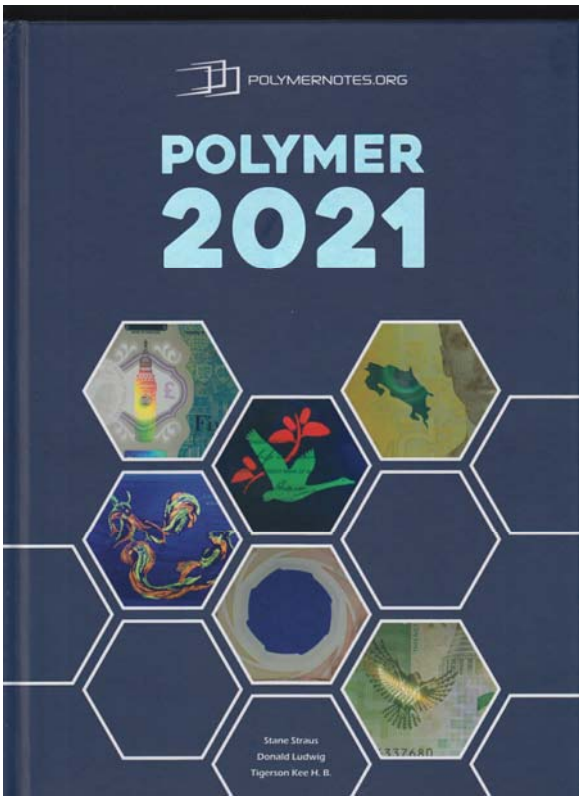
BOOK REVIEW

POLYMER 2021

Stane Straus/Donald Ludwig/Tigerson Kee H.B.

Doug Nyholm



The new updated version of polymer banknotes has been released. This covers in depth the history and all countries who have issued or are presently issuing polymer banknotes. This is the fourth edition of this book with other books being issued in 2012, 2014, and 2016. Over the years these books have significantly increased in size as well as the number of countries that issue these banknotes. The 2014 edition contains 144 pages, the 2018 205 pages and this latest edition is hardcover and contains a whopping 377 pages. The 2021 edition has 27 additional countries since the 2018 edition which brings the total of countries to 69 issuing polymer banknotes.

The book is divided into five main chapters. The first covers what is polymer and the different types and substrates. The second explains the differences between regular notes, replacement notes, specimen and proof notes, errors, numismatic products and test and promotional notes. Part three is the bulk of the book which is a catalog of issued polymer notes and is arranged by country with many color examples and pricing of the various notes of the individual country. Included is a description of who or what is shown on the notes and for some countries this information is quite extensive. The section for Australia, which is the first country to issue true polymer notes encompasses 14 pages. Following the country section is a chapter which covers the various numismatic products. This details un-cut sheets and special presentation examples issued by each country. Finally there is a chapter about test and promotional notes

This book covers all the information one would need to study and collect these interesting notes. The book is printed on quality paper in 8 x 11 1/2 size in full color. It can be ordered directly from order@polymernotes.org or visit their store at www.polymernotes.org/store. The book is priced at Euro 42 or about $60 US plus $10 shipping. It is shipped directly from Slovenia and from the date of my order arrived in less than 2 weeks. They state the this current edition is limited to 2,500 copies.

EDITOR'S MESSAGE

MERRY CHRISTMAS

The holidays and Christmas is upon us again! Please be sure to RSVP by December 3rd if you plan to attend our Christmas dinner. There will be over $3,500 in prizes with many Silver Dollars and other great prizes.

I hope that many of you will be receiving a numismatic gift for Christmas under your tree. I'm also sure that many of these gifts will be picked out by yourself as most spouses are unsure of what to get his or her collector. I remember years ago about a major surprise under my Christmas Tree. It seems that wives are always better at picking gifts than us men. I unwrapped a $5 San Francisco National Gold Bank Note and remember that Christmas to be very special. I had been looking at that particular note for months at a local coin shop until one day it was gone from the display. I was sad but thought I couldn't afford it anyway, much to my amazement that Christmas morning.

I hope many of you will also get a special item to add to your collection this Christmas and your wish list will be fulfilled.

Merry Christmas/ Happy Holidays to all

Sincerely,

Doug Nyholm
